

Workplace Giving Programs

Working for employers who are invested in the community increases employee morale and retention. Workplace giving programs demonstrate to employees and customers that their community is a company priority. Here are a few examples of workplace giving programs:

1 Employee Matching Gifts

An Employee Matching Gift Program is a charitable giving program set up by a corporation in which the company will match donations made by employees to Families Forward.

2 Employee Volunteer Grants

Volunteer Grants are workplace giving programs set up to encourage employees to volunteer in the communities where they live and work. Companies provide an incentive by offering grants to the nonprofits where employees actively volunteer. Typically these grants are earned by individual employees after meeting certain volunteer thresholds.

3 Volunteer Support Programs

Your company is full of talented individuals who can use their expertise to help families we serve. We are always looking to create unique partnerships with companies and love working with industry experts.

4 Community Grants

Through community grant programs, corporations support their local communities by providing funding to organizations that work to improve the lives of employees, customers, and local neighborhoods. In most cases, organizations apply directly to the company by providing an overview of how the grant will be used.
